Softland, a software development company, today announced that its new web site has gone live.

The website is focused on one product, novaPDF, application that helps users easily convert their files into PDF documents. Further PDF related products will be launched during the year.

The new website also incorporates a wealth of information that can be easily accessed by all visitors and contains dedicated sections tailored for the needs of visitors in search of a reliable PDF converting solution.

The new web site includes:

- Expanded product information, delivering information on its features, description, benefits, screenshots and requirements;
- A Download section, where visitors can download an evaluation version, manual and additional information;
- An expanded Order section where visitors can purchase or upgrade novaPDF, benefiting from volume discounts or special offers
- Comprehensive list of answers to frequently asked questions, online help and contact information
- A searchable glossary of terms and descriptions covering a whole range of PDF related topics
- Product tutorials, walk-throughs and other resources
- Partnership details, news and information about the company
